

Center for Postgraduate Clinical Training and Career Development

Director UEMURA, Kazumasa (Professor)

Vocational training for young doctors who will become professional doctors

This center provides vocational training for young doctors fresh out of medical school and lifelong training for hospital staff.

Operation System

This center is a wing of Center of Education, School of Medicine, Nagoya University, which trains young doctors before graduating from medical school. This center's Postgraduate Clinical Training Group conducts training of doctors and dentists who graduated from medical schools. Also, this center's Hospital Staff Training Group provides lifelong training for hospital staff.

Scope of Medical Services

Providing initial clinical training for doctors and dentists fresh out of medical schools, this center supports their career plan in the Tokai region. The center also runs Skills and IT Laboratory, providing an effective training environment and training programs for all staff of the hospital.

Features

Playing a role as headquarters for medical and clinical training, this center offers seamless education and training plans from medical schools, pregraduate training, postgraduate training, up to lifelong training for doctors and dentists, and manages lifelong training programs for hospital staff.

Medical Service Results

Lectures were held periodically for intern doctors and workshops for hospital staff, and in 2010, a total of seven lectures and workshops were held with a total of 60 people in attendance. Skills and IT Laboratory is used by 1,000 or more groups (approx. 17,000 people) a year, which is the highest usage in the Japan Medical Society.

Other Undertakings

Nagoya University Hospital conducts a medical specialist qualification acquisition support program for young doctors' training in the region in cooperation with seven university hospitals in the Tokai region. This program will help solve the shortage of doctors in the region.

Community Liaison Center

Director ISHIGURO, Naoki (Professor)

Liaison with communities to focus on the quality of life of patients

This center supports liaison with communities in medical services, nursing, and care.

Operation System

This center has personnel from various fields: three doctors, five nurses, six medical social workers, and 15 administrative staff. Featuring cross-functional collaboration groups, the center provides various support programs that link hospitals and local communities. The major tasks of the center are:

- Supporting patients when they leave the hospital
- Acceptance of patient into the hospital
- Provide hospital information
- Consultations with patients
- Promotion programs for collaboration

Scope of Medical Services

Local support nurses and medical social workers collaboratively provide coordination of homecare and transfer of hospitals to support patients when they leave the hospital. Hospital-to-Clinic Collaboration Group conducts administrative work on hospital-to-clinic collaboration and hospital-to-hospital collaboration (providing and accepting introduction). In addition, the center provides a wide range of counseling about cures, medical and welfare systems for cures, provides information on social resource utilization, and patient support.

Features

To flexibly cope with functions required for local collaboration, this center employs a cross-functional structure that integrates various fields. Establishing a support structure that places importance on patients as living people and their quality of life is the center's goal.

Medical Service Results

The number of patients who receive supports when discharging hospital has been gradually increasing, totaling 939 in fiscal year 2011. The number of registered doctors promoting collaboration among medical facilities in the community exceeded 1,500 as of March 2012. This center proactively holds lectures for registered doctors, workshops on community collaboration among multiple occupations, and in-house workshops on support for patients discharge.

Other Undertakings

The center plans and hosts a variety of symposiums with the keywords of "local collaboration".